zerns were seen, and a funny Chinaman, fashioned from pumpkins, stood in one corner, with diamond eyes and long queue. And there was a quaint gypsy who disclosed all sorts of mysterious and exciting futures to the round-eyed misses who assembled about her knees.

Best of all was the joyous feast set before the delighted children. The spread was in the kitchen, on a long table, where were, with red-cheeked apples, nuts and pumpkin pies and other goodies. In the center was a great pumpkin with faces on either side, and surrounding this were tall candles, shaded with apples, scooped out, and from whose sides horrible faces grinned. All about the sparsely-lighted kitchen jack-o'-lanterns swung, and there was a cake on the table containing a ring, dime and thimble, determining who should be the first bride, the one to have money, and the old maid or bachelor.

Those present were: Amy Marie Norton, Clara Smith, Emeline Childs, Elizabeth Hicks, Jane Rollins, Jennie Buckley, Poppe and Marguerite Drake, Eva Bailey, Katherine Stearns, Helen Jones, Aileen McArthur, Marjory Culey, Alice Cline, Frances Moler, Georgia Off, Dorothy Edmonds, Viola Vander Loek, Adelaide Gillis, Emma Conroy, Clark and Juliette Borden, and Masters, Roy Silent, Roy and Harold Bailey, Louis Woodbine, Everett and Lawrence Barker, Paul Buckley, Joe Mather, Roydon, Keith and Murray Vosburg, Paul Herron, Paul Rader, Dwight Williams, Arnold and Gordon MacLeish, Henry Boynton, David Vermillion, John Randall, William Lovett, Craig Lovett, Elting Brown, Cosmo Morgan, Hamilton and James Rollins, George Caswell, Hancock Banning, Jr., Lawrence and Van Kelsey, Edward Elson, Harry Borden, Harold and Allan Davis, and Leish Guyer.
